Not To Be Missed

- Samson Talbot Hall of Biological Science is named after Denison's fifth president. The handsome four-story facility was completed for the beginning of the 2003-04 academic year. This newest building in the University's Science Quadrangle features flexible teaching labs and interactive lecture and seminar rooms and is crowned by a spectacular greenhouse.
- Denison's newest renovation, the Bryant Center for the Arts, reopened in 2009 and provides an inspiring space for the creation of studio art and the study of art history, complete with a state-of-the-art digital media lab. Formerly named Cleveland Hall, the building was opened in 1904 as a gymnasium and later served for three decades as a home to the studio arts.
- The innovative Burton D. Morgan Center, dedicated during Homecoming Weekend in October 2003, is designed to be the hub of campus life, bringing together students, faculty, staff and alumni. A gateway to the new Reese~Shackelford Common, the Morgan Center includes numerous high-tech classrooms and office spaces for visiting speakers, as well as the Welsh Hills Room for receptions and dinners, and the Faculty Common area.
- The F.W. Olin Science Hall was completed in 1995 and features a 42-seat planetarium with a computerized Zeiss projector, a laser spectrometer, computer clusters and an enormous collection of minerals, rocks and fossils.
- The Mitchell Recreation and Athletics Center, opened in 1994, is an 81,500-square-foot facility with international squash courts, a regulation Olympic 200-meter indoor track, tennis courts, aerobics room, classrooms and an array of state-of-the-art equipment in its strength and fitness rooms.
- The Denison Biological Reserve is a natural laboratory for bioecologists, and the Polly Anderson Field Station, dedicated in 1995, houses classroom and laboratory study spaces for students of astronomy, biology, ecology and environmental studies.
